Stimulus Online has published the new, full-length demonstration of the game. The video recreates a high-intensity 11v11 match at the ultimate speed of 8 frames per second, in which the combatants are released from the match with animated, pixelized blood coming from the stump of their nose. Nearly two in five US adults struggle with a mental illness, the highest rate ever recorded by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Even though a host of factors, ranging from the stress of the job market to a decline in mental health services, can contribute to these numbers, experts believe that changes in the way people view and treat mental health issues could be playing a major role in the surge. First, we need to understand what the new stats are telling us. In recent years, researchers have been revising the definition of mental illness. The DSM, or diagnostic and statistical manual, of mental illnesses has changed multiple times, and with each revision, the set of illnesses considered to be mental illnesses has broadened. In the past, for instance, people in certain subcultures of the LGBTQ community would not be labeled as mentally ill even though the DSM had adopted the label for depression and anxiety. AD AD Now, researchers say the new numbers show that the number of people deemed to be mentally ill has dramatically increased. “This has happened as a result of change in the definition of mental illness and the availability of mental health services,” said Sejal Shah, a professor of sociology and neuroscience at the University of Southern California, who writes about psychiatry and mental health. In the past, someone’s mental illness could be determined by how ill they felt. Now, researchers say, there’s a potential “reproducible change” in how we understand mental illness. “People were much less likely to seek treatment for mental illness,” Shah said. “A lot of people now believe that it is not just a medical problem and there are other things they should be seeking out.” Many of the people who need help with their mental health aren’t going to a doctor. They’re going to a website, an app, or even a therapy app. AD AD “We’ve become way more interested in the psychological and psychiatric aspect of mental illness,” Shah said. “If we’re going to

But I am saying that we still have many problems and many needs and that we still need to invest in education for every person. So I'm saying, in my view, that it will be worthwhile for the UK and it will be worthwhile for the EU.
