: Mickey Mundell Loves His Hosts! In December of 2012, the immensely popular tabloid "National Enquirer" (a tabloid magazine recently revived by Daily Mail & General Trust) published a shocking story. According to the report, veterans of Alien Abduction encounters talk about how two large, luminescent bugs of approximately 20 inches in diameter were nearly ejected from their bodies. Said a self-styled government investigator in the British tabloid, "If the abduction was a scam, why in the world are so many snotty aliens duded up in full tactical armor?" One of the investigators was NEST (National Enquiry Team Service) and was set up to deal with cases of such peculiar nature. In the United Kingdom, there was the National Enquiry Team Service (NEST) established at the end of the 1980's in response to falling UFO sightings and alien contact. In-keeping with military research and training curriculum, NEST was set up as if it were a branch of the British military, however, as the years went by, it had more of a 'Police' environment. So just what the heck is so 'not cool' about Aliens? In-coming, Mickey, you are an alien The story in the Examiner that will be analyzed here is the same as that in the National Enquirer. It claims that 'Moffett' in Scotland gave an interview to a self-styled 'investigating Team' working for NEST. Several years ago, his company was shaken when his wife, Margaret, was reportedly abducted. At the time, she was using the alias Lady Madeline and the couple had six children. On September 11, 1988, Margaret became pregnant with their seventh child. Margaret gave birth at some point during the following year to a stillborn infant. Mickey begins the series of events by describing his first encounter in a Scottish camp, where he was on holiday. We are informed that to go on the trip, he wrote to the paparazzi outlet, 'Scotsman', about getting some work in Scotland. According to him, the newspaper also published a story in the 'Scotsman' which apparently ended his holiday. https
